Why ImPACT?

- Decisions about when an injured athlete can return to play following a concussion are often very difficult.
- Returning an athlete to play before COMPLETE recovery significantly increases his/her risk for sustaining an additional, even more severe, brain injury.
- Athletes will often fail to report symptoms of concussion hoping they can get back to the playing field more quickly.
- If athletes return to play too soon following a concussion their season and their health are at serious risk.

Concussion Facts:

- Approximately 1.6 million sport-related concussions per year in the U.S.
- Helmets don't always prevent concussions.
- Returning to at-risk activity before recovery is dangerous.
- The ImPACT test provides an objective way to determine recovery from concussion.
